Heaps of snow, minimal sunlight, gusty winds that make you feel like you might as well be at the North Pole ... these are some of the reasons we dread winter. But there are, of course, plenty of perks that come along with the frigid temps — ski vacations being one of them. Even if hitting the slopes isn't your cup of hot cocoa, clicking into a set of skis is well worth it when it means you can return to a cozy chalet after a day spent traipsing down the mountain. Chalet-style ski resorts are nothing new, but Oyster.com reviewers traveled the globe and have found 13 properties that stand out from the rest.

Nita Lake Lodge, Whistler

A luxurious escape from the madness of the touristy parts of Whistler, the 77 suites at Nita Lake Lodge evoke sophisticated, mountain-town style, with high, vaulted ceilings, fireplaces and beautiful chalet-like balconies with gorgeous views. Decor is effortlessly elegant, playing on simple, contrasting colors, like clean, white linens and dark wood trim. An on-site European restaurant features organic and sustainable food. More dining options can be found in Creekside — just a short walk away — and a free shuttle carts visitors to Whistler regularly.
