

10 highlights of Oliver Osoyoos Wine Country

by Kurtis Kolt on March 31st, 2016 at 7:29 AM

The rocks at Stoneboat Vineyards adds a mineral flavour to its wines.

This edition of the Georgia Straight has partnered with the Oliver Osoyoos Wine Country so readers can get to know its wineries and their respective stories a little more intimately.

Over here at the Bottle, it's prompted me to reflect on the region and my personal experiences there through various sips and travels.

This week, in no particular order, I've listed my 10 favourite things about British Columbia's Oliver Osoyoos Wine Country.

3. Tucking in at Miradoro

The wines of Tinhorn Creek Vineyards have been consistently enjoyable for over two decades now, from their tropically refreshing Gewürztraminer to their Oldfield Series Cabernet Franc, loaded with red berry, cocoa, and spice. While those two wines alone make Tinhorn Creek a destination worth visiting, it's an absolute must when in the area to grab a table at the winery's Miradoro Restaurant. Chef Jeff Van Geest's celebration of local fare with slight stylistic nods to the Mediterranean is always on point, and the epic view from the restaurant's perch can't be beat.